EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

There is broad bipartisan support among Ohio's parents for a law requiring app stores to obtain parental approval for children to download apps.

Fully eighty percent (80%) of parent voters support a law requiring app stores to obtain parental approval for children to download apps. There is considerable intensity behind this position, with 50% saying they strongly support such a law.

This support reaches across both parties with Republicans at 85% support and Democratic voters at 77% support.

Requiring App Stores To Obtain Parental Approval

"Thinking about the issue of children downloading apps to their phones or mobile devices: Would you support or oppose a law requiring app stores to obtain parental approval for children to download apps?"

SUPPORT	80%
Strongly support	50%
OPPOSE	18%

In a follow up question, 72% of parents say it would be easier to provide approval in one place such as an app store, while only 22% say it would be easier separately through each app.

Ohio's parents are largely speaking with one voice on this issue, and want to be given the authority to approve downloads for their children through app stores.
